THE MAIN WITNESS

Commonwealth Will Soon
Confront Accused With Its Ace Witness

BOWSER MAY APPEAR

Expected To Relate How He Paid Lawrence $5,000 of
A Promised $10,000

HARRISBURG, Nov. 17.—(INS)—The Lawrence blackmail trial today moved slowly to the point where the Commonwealth will confront Democratic State Chairman David L. Lawrence with the man whom it claims he extorted $5,000 "under threats."

Spurgeon Bowser, former president of the Pioneer Materials Company, of Kittanning, and a key witness for the prosecution, may take the stand late today. Prosecutor Earl V. Compton hinted.

The State expects Bowser to relate how he paid Lawrence $5,000 of a promised $10,000 for obtaining a gravel contract for his company while Lawrence was secretary of the Commonwealth during the Earle administration.

As the fifth day of the trial began, Edward A. Griffith, Erie district highway engineer from 1935 until his dismissal in 1937 by former Gov. George H. Earle, was called back to the witness stand for his second day of testimony.

Griffith, who yesterday related the happenings which preceded the award of a state gravel contract to the Pioneer Materials Company, a preliminary to the Earle gravel scandal, was expected to relate how he paid Lawrence $5,000 of a promised $10,000 for obtaining a gravel contract for his company while Lawrence was secretary of the Commonwealth during the Earle administration.

Two Alarms Summon The Firemen From Yardley

YARDLEY, Nov. 17.—Yardley firemen were called to extinguish grass fires, yesterday afternoon, at the Villa Victoria Academy on the West Trenton Road, evidently caused by sparks from the railroad.

Later in the afternoon the firemen were summoned to extinguish a fence fire between the properties of Mrs. Emilie Yeager and Mrs. Helen Cook, which was ignited from a bonfire, sparks being carried by the wind.

No property damage was sustained.

Lee Warner, Jr., Tells of Work As Personnel Officer

Lee Warner, Jr., personnel officer of the Warner Sand Company was the guest speaker at the regular meeting of the Rotary Club in the Elks' Home yesterday afternoon, when he talked on the subject of employer-employee relations, and what is done by his company to make the conditions of every employee better.

"Modern industrial relations personnel officers endeavor to look after the human side of the employee," Warner stated.

"Practically all labor trouble is caused by something which was not done correctly. And although it is impossible to get all employees suited 100 per cent, yet it is possible to work satisfactory plans for the great majority."

Warner stated that the VanSeiver Company has had an exceptional record to last time due to accidents. Some of the policies followed by the Warner company included very detailed application forms so that the worker can be placed where he is best suited; strict physical examinations and re-checks every other year; complete accident reports filed with the Workmen's Compensation Department; first aid courses in safety; educational programs for the employees; insurance and savings programs; and publications are sent out each month to the workers.

"Our Company maintains a spirit of co-operation for the benefit of the employee and we try to aid wherever and whenever possible," Warner declared.

The speaker, who was introduced by Franklin Wills, illustrated his talk with charts and diagrams.

Club singing was led by Otto Grupp. The meeting was in charge of president Thomas R. Jones. Several boys from Fallington High School were guests of Mr. Wills, in conjunction with the vocational service committee of the Rotary Club.

There will be no meeting of the club next week.

There was also a comedy reel, and another showing the daredevil antics of stunt driver "Jimmie" Lynch in an automobile.

Plans are being tentatively outlined for the November 30th meeting, when the Exchange Club will entertain the Bristol High School football squad. There will be no meeting next week.

MAJOR NAVAL HUNT
UNDER WAY FOR RAIDER

British in Search of German Cruiser Which Sank The Africa Shell

OFF EASTERN AFRICA

By Charles A. Smith
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

LONDON, Nov. 17.—(INS)—A German cruiser roving the waters off Eastern Africa was responsible for the sinking of the 706-ton British tanker Africa Shell in Mozambique Channel between Portuguese East Africa and Madagascar, according to a report received in London today.

This information arrived as a major naval hunt got under way for the German raider that sank the little tanker in Portuguese territorial waters.

A Reuters dispatch from Lourenco Marques in Portuguese East Africa said the crew of the Africa Shell sent a message saying a German cruiser fired a shot across the tanker's bow and halted the vessel.

An officer and a group of German sailors boarded the Africa Shell, arrested the captain, seized provisions and ordered the tanker's crew to leave, the report stated.

After that the tanker was sunk by two bombs which blew a gaping hole in the stern, the dispatch said, adding that the vessel was lying upside down on the bottom of the channel and that salvage was impossible.

Inspirational Address
Heard by Fathers, Sons

One hundred and eighty fathers and sons sat down to the annual Father and Son banquet in Bristol Presbyterian Church, last evening, the delicious menu being prepared by members of the Presbyterian Guild.

Pronounced one of the most successful of their affairs, the group listened attentively to an address by Dr. Frank D. Getty, director of Young People's Work under the Board of Christian Education of the Presbyterian Church. His subject was in question form "What Have You In Your Hand?"

Many effective illustrations were used by the speaker as he stressed the importance of each individual using abilities he possesses. He pointed out the importance of the relationship existing between father and son. Dr. Getty has for the past 18 years been actively engaged in work for young people.

Brief remarks by the pastor, the Rev. James R. Galley; greetings from local churches, by the Rev. George E. Boswell; invocation by the Rev. Andrew George Sollis; and benediction by Dr. H. A. Maser, Philadelphia, were included.

A vocal quartet composed of Messrs. Melvin and Russell A. Johnson, Harry Smith, and William Fry gave several selections, the accompanist being Mrs. Harold Hanson. Paul Kropp was toastmaster; and Adrian Bustraan was song leader.

The total was revealed when Ralph Wenrich, supervisor of the adult evening school, made his report to the directors.

In the monthly report of supervising principal Joseph S. Neidig, it was shown that there are 1,195 pupils enrolled in the school, including six post-graduates and 43 pupils in the kindergarten. There were 98 tardy marks, 593½ days of absence, 97.8 per cent attendance, 299 non-resident pupils, and 53 visitors.

Permission was granted for the use of the high school auditorium for the Community Oratorio Society's presentation of Handel's "Messiah" and also for the Armistice program.

Not To Name A Justice
At Once

Hyde Park, N. Y., Nov. 17.—President Roosevelt will withhold his appointment of a Supreme Court justice to succeed the late Justice Pierce Butler, until the January session of Congress, he indicated today shortly after arriving at his Hudson Valley home.

Any development of an emergency in the high court dockets will bring about an earlier appointment, he hinted.

At the moment, Mr. Roosevelt said he was giving no thought to choosing his fifth appointee to the Supreme Court—a nomination which will give the New Deal control of the high tribunal for some years to come.

To Hold Hearings

Harrisburg, Nov. 17.—The propriety over sub-metering and remodeling of electric current as permitted by the Philadelphia Electric Company and by the Metropolitan Edison Company of Reading, today was made the subject of separate investigations by the Public Utilities Commission.

Hearings will be held for the Philadelphia Electric Company on November 30, in Philadelphia City Hall, and for the Metropolitan Edison Company November 29, at Harrisburg.

The former served consumers in Philadelphia, Bucks, Chester, Delaware and Montgomery counties, while Metropolitan Edison operated in Berks, Bucks, Chester, Adams, Cumberland, Dauphin, Lancaster, Lebanon, Montgomery, Monroe, Northampton, Pike and York counties.

Capone in Hospital

Baltimore, Nov. 17.—Al Capone spent his first night outside of prison walls in 7½ years in a $30 a day suite at the Union Memorial Hospital—still under guard.

Police Commissioner Robert Stanton stationed uniformed and plain clothes officers around the hospital to prevent, Stanton said, possible gangster reprisals against Chicago's erstwhile gang overlord.

Capone was eager today to take the malaria treatment—the injection of malaria germs into his blood stream—in the hope that this disease might cure or correct paresis, malady of the brain, from which he is suffering.

More Third-Term Talk

Washington, Nov. 16. The political atmosphere is again full of third-term talk. In a high state of exaltation the group of advanced New Dealers, known as the "inner circle," now contend that nothing can prevent the Roosevelt renomination. Some anti-New Deal Democratic Senators look upon his selection as likely and the New Deal writers have begun again to talk about "drafting."

ONE is that Mr. McAdoo, though strongly supported by Mr. Roosevelt, was decisively defeated for renomination last year and is now without much political influence or party standing. Certainly he will not control the California delegation to the next Democratic convention. The days when he could deliver delegates have gone.

A second reason is that, as Senator Hiram Johnson points out, Mr. McAdoo in this matter is not at all a disinterested individual. On the contrary, he is quite clear.

CROYDON, Nov. 17.—By means of telephone Mrs. Thomas Donohue, Oak avenue, heard the ceremony which united in marriage her sister, Miss Amelia Knecht, Second avenue, and William O'Keefe, Jr., Philadelphia.

The ceremony performed by justice of the peace James Laughlin, at his home, Wednesday evening at eight o'clock, was distinctly heard by Mrs. Donohue in her home, she being unable to attend the nuptials. Excellent Progress Noted
For The St. Francis Band

For the past 20 years, Brother Elias Ambrose has been a patient and thorough instructor in instrumental technique and has been moderator of the St. Francis High School band at Eddington. Edward J. Maguire has served as professor of music and accomplished leader of the band during the past 15 years.

St. Francis High School musical renditions heard throughout Philadelphia this year were possible only after assiduous practice before and after regular school hours.

This entailed some sacrifice but the delightful reception of the numbers by the student body more than compensated for the long hours spent in rehearsals.

If the progress manifested during the past is continued, it is felt that some of the members will have paved the way for a successful career in music, state school authorities.

Profitable, Interesting
Day Is Spent By Sorosis

LANGHORNE, Nov. 17.—With two speakers with greatly diversified subjects, and each keenly interested in their subject matter, members of Sorosis at an all-day session yesterday spent profitable hours.

A forum was scheduled by the International Relations committee for the morning, with Dr. Walter Mohr, George School, being introduced by the committee chairman, Mrs. Roscoe L. Horner. During the afternoon the members were also loaned to leave as Mrs. Lawrence Murdock, known through her newspaper column as Barbara Barnes, spoke upon interior decorating.

Dr. Mohr did not dwell particularly upon the bellicose state of Europe, but gave more attention to the political set-ups of the various countries there, and spoke at length on Communism and Nazism and their threats to the world. "We are the largest and strongest nation, and are naturally going to be propagandized," he informed the club members and their guests, adding that as a whole we know right from wrong, while in some countries where Nazism or Communism hold sway, the people know only what their leaders care to tell them.

He told that the Christian religion here teaches the fundamental and basic things in life, and the sacredness of human personality, wherein many forms of religion in some other countries do not fulfill needs of the people, and in many instances religious activities have been downed. The real need in Europe as seen by Dr. Mohr is for leaders to sit at a council table, and ask themselves "What is wrong in Europe?" this being far better than fighting. "They must clean their own house, and not ask us to do it," he added.

During the question period the speaker was asked if there was any way whereby individuals can decide what is propaganda, and he referred the women to the monthly bulletin of the Propaganda Institute, telling that there is good as well as bad propaganda, and it is the duty of the individual to educate himself so that he can discern the difference.

Songs by Miss Madeline Rumpf opened the afternoon program. So filled with her subject of interior decorating was Mrs. Murdock that the women plied her with questions after her informative and interesting talk. A display of materials interested, and the speaker gave suggestions as to bleaching of fabrics, color tones, etc.

WHAT BIG SPENDING MEANS

Billions do not mean much in this day of huge governmental expenditures. The average reader, upon seeing 12 figures in a row, scarcely raises his eyebrows. The vastness of the sum simply doesn't register. It is accepted as something quite ordinary and not in the least surprising.

B. C. Forbes, distinguished author and publisher, has told the story of political spending in such a way as to arouse the average citizen from his state of lethargy, the following points being characteristic:

1. Every time you draw a breath the Government at Washington spends $717.

2. The cost of the Panama Canal ($375,000,000) was spent every 20 days of the New Deal.

3. Foreign nations owed the United States $13,670,087,391 in May 1936 (more now, of course). The Government spent that amount in a little more than two years of President Roosevelt's first term.

4. A string of $1 bills stretching 150 miles would fall short of meeting Federal expenditures for one day by more than what 2,855 American workers earn in a whole year.

Perhaps even this graphic and pointed way of presenting the size and scope of the nation's spending will fail to make much of an impression. But it should give pause for thought among politicians who seem to have been operating on the theory that America's treasury is a pit from which money can be constantly drawn without ever reaching bottom.

HOGAN OF 999

Hogan of 999 has passed on to receive a reward greater than the many honors which his fellow men accorded him in his long lifetime.

Long before the epochal event which made his name famous, the world-beating run of the locomotive 999 one day in May, 1893, Charles H. Hogan had achieved worldwide fame as the greatest railroad locomotive engineer in the United States. It was because of his outstanding record that he was chosen to pilot the super-engine of that day 46 years ago, and he came through with flying colors.

But Hogan did not rest content on his laurels. After the age of 70, when most railroad men retire, Hogan entered a new phase of his life, as manager of railroad shop labor in Buffalo, N. Y., a post in which he won the respect of rail executives and workmen until the day of his death at the age of 89.

Today man is slanted about the earth in airplanes and perhaps some day he may be shot through space in rockets, but many folk will never get over their affection for trains. And certainly they shall not forget the 999 and the engineer who sat in the cab as the engine and train skinned over the rails at 112½ miles an hour between Batavia and Buffalo, N. Y., and who had returned east from the Union Pacific because "his girl lived there."

"The Washington political view" is said to be that it would be hap-py politics to carry us into the war un-til after the 1940 election." And after that it will be worse.

Also, if a better barber opened up a shop in the woods, Tarzan would probably be along, as he has to keep up that smooth-shaven appearance.

"LOVE'S INTERLUDE" by -MAY- CHRISTIE

CHAPTER XIX

The afternoon wore on.

At five, Moira made herself a cup of tea, and ate a piece of bread and butter, for she was healthily hungry, having had nothing since breakfast. Now her toilet must be made.

She washed face and hands in the bathroom, powdered, and applied a touch of lipstick. Wetted a comb and ran it through her hair. Pinched in the waves with professional fingers. Curled the ends up over a pencil. Sprayed perfume from an atomizer over her hair.

She donned it anxiously, turning and twisting before the mirror, tilting the mirror at various angles to get the full effect. "It doesn't look a bit amateurish, if I do say it!" she remarked to her reflection, smiling, pleased with her handiwork, "and no one would ever dream I got it for $2.95!"

Six o'clock. A quarter after. The last touches to the gate-legged table made. The tall yellow lamp drawn up to one side. On the other, a log-fire crackled. The flames sparkled on her glassware and the terra-cotta plates and dishes on the checked tablecloth with its tiny fern as centerpiece. The chrysanthemums made a brave showing on the bookcase, on a lowboy she had picked up at an auction, on a little side-table. "They really make the room look most luxurious," she told herself. She brought in the salad and the stuffed tomatoes and set them on the table, where they added further notes of color. She set crescent rolls at either cover, and tiny paper cups with salted almonds in them.

Half-past six!

She brought the trifle from the ice-box and set it on the side-table by the chrysanthemums, and the three-section plate that held crackers, butter and cheese.

"Now I'd better mix the Martinis. Tarry likes his dry. I must remember that."

A heavenly odor permeated the apartment—a mixture of flowers, perfume, and—sweetest of all to Tarry's nose—the sizzling fragrance of roast partridge with a dash of salt pork added.

Twenty minutes of seven!

The tomato bisque would spoil if she wasn't careful. She turned the gas-flame off under its earthenware pot.

Church bells rang sweetly, slowly, seven times!

The silence that followed was broken by the sharp tinkle of her telephone. Tarry explaining the delay? In eager anticipation, she lifted the receiver.

"Awfully sorry, darling, but I can't get down to you this evening," came over the line. "I've just got in from golf and I feel rotten. I'm shivering and aching all over. Think it's flu. You'll have to excuse me. Me for a hot bath and bed!"

"But, Tarry—listen—I've the cocktails ready, and such a lovely dinner waiting for you. Oh, Tarry, you can't do this to me, after all my preparations! You simply must come!" she implored.

"I tell you I'm sick, Moira. I can't make it. Have a heart!"

A pause. Tears blinded her eyes. Her throat felt tight. A weight pressed on her chest.

"I'm awfully sorry, but I really couldn't go out again tonight, the way I'm shivering and shaking," he insisted.

She hung the receiver up, walked blindly about the room. Her throat hurt. "If he cared for you, even if he had a bit of a cold, he'd come over," she said aloud. Choked a little. Stared at the dinner-table that looked so lovely in the lamplight and the firelight. A perfect meal, and no one to share it with!

She'd swallow her pride. Call Tarry back. Tell him she'd have a hot toddy ready for him, and he could leave directly after dinner. A shame! He should miss anything so perfect! The toddy would combat the cold and give him an appetite.

His landlady answered her ring. "Would you please ask Mr. Griggs to come to the 'phone? I know he has a cold and has gone to his room, but if you'd ask him to come here a minute, and please say it's important."

"Cold or no cold, he left the house five minutes ago with some friends of his," the landlady snapped back.

"Rotter!" said Moira, over and over.

Then: "This is an eye-opener, you fool!" Anger mounted.

To have labored so lovingly, for this! Given of her time, her hard-earned money!

He must be laughing at her up his sleeve. Must think mighty little of her to throw her over at the last minute—put her off with flimsy untruths.

Why, those friends he had gone out with were probably standing beside him in the hall as he made his excuses over the telephone, and were now laughing and kidding him about her.

It was all she could do to keep from grabbing a corner of the pretty tablecloth, hurling dishes and preparations to the floor. It would be a relief to sit down in the wreckage and yell what she thought of Tarry at the top of her lungs, and then bawl her eyes out.

But she wouldn't!

"It's all for the best! I've been a fool too long. I had this coming to me, I suppose."

A slight smell of burning assailed her nostrils. The partridges singeing? She flew to turn off the gas, and take them out of the oven in the nick of time. Not that it mattered now if they were spoiled or not.

The telephone shrilled, shattering the silence.

Tarry's conscience troubling him for his deceit? Or perhaps he suspected she had checked up on him, and wanted to lie it out further?

No, she wouldn't answer the 'phone.

It shrilled again. Again. It almost had a banshee wail.

Was lost love calling?

"Keep still, Moira, you fool!"

But her heart wouldn't stay quiet. Her feet impelled her to the instrument after it had been silent for several seconds.

"Hello!" she said tonelessly. But the call seemed to have gone now into the limbo of lost things.

There was a faint humming on the wire, then: "May I speak to Miss Carewe, please?" in a male voice she didn't recognize.

"Who wants her?" she snapped. She was through with men and their tricks. If it was Randall Carlton, gift or no gift, she'd hang up.

"Rodney Stone, tell her, please."

"May I take a message?"—still in sharp, business-like vein. She was in no mood for conversation.

"Would you kindly ask her if she received some game I sent her? If it wouldn't disturb her, might I speak a moment to her?"

The quiet, far-away voice had a soothing note.

She paused sufficiently long to let him think she had been summoned to the phone. Her voice sounded natural and pleasant as she said: "I must thank you very much for the partridges, doctor. Where are you 'phoning from?"

"From the Pennsylvania station. Back from a couple of days' hunting on Long Island. I was counting on getting in earlier, and inviting you to have a bite of dinner with me somewhere—but now, perhaps, I'm too late."

"Dinner?" She laughed shakily. Ironically.

"You couldn't make it, I suppose? You live on Twelfth Street, don't you? I'll come and get you in a taxi."

She gave him directions. "And listen—it's providential that your lovely partridges are cooked—I've quite a little feast—" she laughed awkwardly—"all ready and waiting to be eaten, as a matter of fact! Hurry along, and I promise you a very good dinner, all trimmings included! You could be here in ten or fifteen minutes."

"Right. What a stroke of luck!" he responded.

She hung up. It was a different face reflected in the mirror above the chrysanthemums now. Hurt and anger no longer were imaged in her eyes, the twist of her lips, her puckered forehead. She was smiling.

A charming companion, handsome and appreciative, was to share the dinner with her that Tarry had despised.

She hummed a little tune as she scurried about the apartment, opening a window for a moment to let out the smell of the cooking, putting the partridges back into the oven, the tomato bisque soup in its earthenware pot.

She opened a box of cheese straws. They would go nicely with a cocktail, she thought. She was glad, too, about that bottle of old Madeira. She set it on the table, proudly.

"This," said the doctor, as he stepped over her threshold into the warmth and glow inside, and his keen kind eyes traveled from the lovely girl in the pale green dress to her charming setting of flowers and firelight and dainty dinner-table, "is like walking into Aladdin's Cave—a delightful surprise!"

"You didn't think I was so domesticated?"—as he discarded overcoat, muffler and gloves.

"I thought lots of things, and they were all very pleasant, I assure you. But I didn't expect a treat of this kind. So much cozier than dining in a restaurant!" His eyes had taken in the fact that the dinner was laid for two only. That was good.

She thought: "He mustn't know that someone else has let me down! That I was expecting someone else! That I spent hours preparing all this!"

She said, with a little laugh: "Even if I do live alone, that isn't any reason why I shouldn't occasionally pamper myself. I like nice meals, nicely served. Why not?"

"And you gather me in from the highways and hedges and feed me?"

"To share your nice present! I'm glad you 'phoned. I was beginning to feel horribly greedy and conscience-stricken. I really should have asked my friends in to share my dinner."

He said, simply: "I'm glad you didn't."

"You shot the birds yourself, of course? Or is it tactless to ask?"

"Yes to the first. No to the second." He showed a flash of even white teeth. He looked healthy, handsome and happy.

"Will you have a Martini?" She moved over to the lowboy that was combination cupboard and bar.

"Thanks. Let me do the mixing." She noticed the strength and fineness of his hands as he poured from the two bottles. He was wearing shaggy grey plus-fours. A smoky, woody odor hung about those tweeds—a clean, virile, masculine sort of odor that seemed part and parcel of himself. Out-doorish and healthy.

His bronzed face glowed. His dark blue eyes had the clear, penetrating look that sailors have, as though some of the blue of the ocean had got into them from gazing over endless waters.

There was a squareness to his jaw. A strong face, an arresting face. Usually she had seen it serious, but now it looked boyishly carefree.

"You don't often get a chance at weekends in the country, do you, Dr. Stone?"

As she smiled at him over her glass's rim, he thought how pretty she was in her delicate green dress.

"Oh, no, worse luck. Do you?"

"Oh, sometimes." Her country weekends were in the past, but don't let him think she was only a poor little toiler in the city. Be glamorous tonight.

"You look like a lovely bit of the country in springtime in that shimmering green dress."

"Thank you," she sparkled back, well pleased, "I didn't know you ever made such pretty speeches!"

"Only when I'm inspired by a lovely girl who takes pity on a hungry chap."

She laughed and dimpled. "Hungry? We'll remedy that."

"For the food of companionship. For a bit of laughter, a glimpse of real home after the everlasting grind."

CHAPTER XX

As Rodney Stone looked round the room that was so innocently festive, she felt recompensed for the money and the hours she'd spent in sewing, planning, cooking, arranging this setting and this meal.

After all, if Tarry had let her down, it was heartening to know that her efforts were not lost.

Others could enjoy her company, her good cheer. Someone as important in the scheme of things as Tarry seemed more than content to be with her tonight.

It was amazing how quickly she had recovered.

She brought the tomato bisque to the table in two little terra-cotta bowls. Croutons floated in the soup that was beautifully flavored. Rodney Stone partook of it with gusto.

"You made this yourself?" as he put his spoon down.

"Yes, though its foundation did come out of a can, I added a dash of 'tother, this and that. My special secret. Have some more? There's plenty."

He insisted on bringing it himself, this time. It seemed he knew a good deal about cooking. In college days he'd tried his hand at things out of a chafing-dish, when he was hungry burning the midnight oil, or when some of the other fellows dropped in at his rooms for a snack.

He'd cooked on fishing trips, on climbing expeditions both at home and abroad. Rising at dawn for duck-hunting and other sports made a fellow mighty hungry. Sailing was what first started him cooking, he told her.

He made her laugh with some of his experiences.

She said: "I'd no idea you were so out-doorish! I love the out-doors too. I once spent a week on an old wherry on the Schuylkill River with my father. About the only hobby beyond books he's ever had is sailing. But even there he was terribly absent-minded. He ran us into the bank several times. We'd all sorts of amusing mishaps. I did the cooking and cleaning, and once when I was resting face-down on the four-inch strip of deck at the wherry's side, father, dreaming of his next scientific lecture or some treatise he was planning, ran so close along the bank that before I knew what happened, a bush had caught me by the hair—I had long hair then—and I was dragged off the boat and left suspended!"

"Like Absalom in the Bible story," said Rodney Stone, and they both laughed. "The hair grew again, I note. You have very pretty hair, if you'll excuse my saying so, Miss Moira."

She was about to remark that she didn't bother much about it nowadays, being much in the position of the boy in the confectioner's shop. She was sick of hairdressing and worrying about the newest coiffures and styles. But she thought better of turning the conversation to Miss Stone's convalescent patient.

When the evening that was now so festive was nearing a close, perhaps she would inquire about her and her progress, as was fitting. But now don't bring the recollection of near-tragedy to shadow their holiday spirit.

"Another time," she went on quickly, smiling reminiscently, "I'd washed my father's underclothes, and set them carefully to dry on the lowered mast. Next morning—a gala Sunday—I noticed every boatload that went by were laughing and pointing at us. I couldn't think why until I went to the end of the stern. There on the top of our mast, like banners, waved the underwear. It was really very comical!"

He grinned.

"You're devoted to your father, aren't you? I'd like to meet him some time."

"He'd love that. His life is very quiet. He's really a most distinguished scholar, even though he's never made much money, though with his brains he could have been rich if he'd wanted to," she enthused.

"He has a better kind of richness. That of the mind. And he's rich in having such a loyal daughter, I think."

MATURE WOMAN ADAPTS FASHIONS TO HER NEEDS

By Miss Edna Stephany

(Home Economics Representative)

Older women frankly face the fact that their figures have shortcomings. While many young girls can find dresses which fit them perfectly, most women over 40 have to have the dresses they buy altered considerably.

To dress attractively and suitably is an achievement and a challenge to any woman's ability and esthetic sense. After fifty, no woman should take chances with color, line, and style. The line and cut of the dress is most important and she should make every fashion adapt itself to her individual needs. Years give dignity, an important factor to recognize in planning clothes.

The season's fads are for the young. But there are dozens of attractive designs with simple and good lines which can be worn equally well by either mother or daughter.

Color is vital in the mature woman's wardrobe, just as it is in her daughter's, but perhaps not the same colors or the same shades. Women of every age are permitted to wear becoming colors, but they require careful selection and combination. Deep rich colors—greens, wines, purples, if becoming, are excellent choices. Those who can wear the brighter shades, can use small splashes on the duller shades or black and gray. Accessories always offer possibilities for the use of color.

Here are some specific suggestions for that well-dressed appearance every woman desires:—

Cultivate good carriage, grace and assurance of movement. Be immaculate, well-groomed, with hair well-brushed, smooth, and simply arranged. Wear good fitting shoes and becoming hats.

For the short figure, the softly draped bodice with a high waist line gives length to the skirt. A slight flare below the hip line, as well as a slight fullness in front or back, makes a graceful skirt, but full circular skirts are to be avoided.

Accented shoulders make the rest of the figure seem more slender. Modified princess or box coats, skirts a becoming length regardless of inches, long sleeves and high necks, so popular this season, are good choices for the woman over forty.

RECIPES

CRANBERRY CRAFT

There'll be lots more cranberries around this year than last, because the crop is more than 150,000 barrels higher in volume than the short 1938 crop. Our market authority tells us. And that's a good enough reason for putting some of the interesting new cranberry dishes right into the daily menu. Here are two—a meat dish and a dessert.

Tenderize Meats with Cranberries
Good news for thrifty housewives! Here's a quick, easy way to tenderize your inexpensive cuts of meat... with cranberries.

It's as simple as this—for each 3 pounds meat (pot roast or boiled meats of less tender cuts), add 2 cups of raw cranberries to the gravy or juice while it is cooking.

Try this tenderizing treatment on your favorite low-priced meat for your next meal, and see what a difference it makes. You'll be delighted with the extra richness, extra tenderness, extra flavor it gives both meat and gravy.

Cranberry Nut Cobbler
2 cups sugar
1 cup water
4 cups (1 lb.) fresh cranberries
½ cup chopped walnuts
Grated rind 1 orange
2 tablespoons butter
2 cups flour
4 tablespoons sugar
4 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
4 tablespoons shortening
¾ cup milk

Heat sugar and water to boiling point; add cranberries, walnuts, orange rind and butter and let stand while mixing biscuit dough. Sift dry ingredients together; blend in shortening and add milk. Roll out dough to one-quarter inch thickness. Fill individual baking dishes (shallow custard cups, ramekins or deep dish pie dishes) with cranberries and cover each with biscuit dough. Cut slits in top of dough to allow steam to escape. Bake in very hot oven (450 degrees F.) about 15 minutes. Makes six cobbles in deep dish pie dishes.

FEWER FAIL

NEW YORK — (INS) — New York City elementary schools now fail fewer pupils than ever before in the history of the system. Dr. Harold G. Campbell, superintendent of schools, revealed recently. The decrease, he said, was due to a policy of individualized instruction. In 1938, 96 per cent of the city's pupils were promoted. Ten years ago the comparable figure was 92.8 per cent.

READY FOR WAR

PHILADELPHIA — (INS) — In the event this country is drawn into the present European conflict, some 378 Philadelphia manufacturing plants are ready to switch from peaceful pursuits to war materials under supervision of the federal government. Philadelphia plants are equipped to produce powder, guns, textile products, uniforms, tools, optical supplies, surgical instruments, chemicals, automobile parts, communication, railroad car and locomotives.

HYMNS BOTHER TAVERN

DALLAS, Tex. — (INS) — What's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander, one Dallas saloon operator apparently believes. He called the district attorney's office to complain about noise from a nearby church.

BURGLARIES INCREASE

ST. LOUIS — (INS) — A sharp increase in the number of residence burglaries in the three summer months of this year as compared with the same months last year is reported by Major Albert Bond Lambert, president of the St. Louis Board of Police Commissioners. Figures for the three-month period showed residence burglaries increased 30 per cent in St. Louis over the same period last year.

NORMAN, Okla. — (INS) — A cow recently nullified a whole year of work by Dr. O. J. Eligisti, assistant professor of botany at the University of Oklahoma. Bossy ate up the professor's entire cotton crop that included several new species, expected to lead to an important discovery. "That cow ate a whole year's work," Dr. Eligisti said sadly.

The Great Game of Politics

ly in the third-term boosting class of Mr. Ickes, Mr. Wallace, Mr. Jackson and other of the job-holders.

BECAUSE, the fact is that, after Mr. McAdoo, now 76 years old, had retired from the Senate, he seems to have been particularly well taken care of by the Roosevelt Administration. Inquiry at the office of the United States Maritime Commission developed the fact that he is now chairman of the board of what is known as the American Presidents Line, Limited, which is the name under which the old Dollar Steamship Line has been reorganized by the Government. The further information was vouchsafed that Mr. McAdoo's compensation is approximately $25,000 a year.

WHEN the Dollar Line went into bankruptcy it was taken over by the Maritime Commission, which owns ninety per cent. of the stock of the new company. At the commission's offices, it is explained, Mr. McAdoo was elected by the board; but when the question was asked as to who controls the board, the answer was "Why, we do, of course." So, it seems that after retiring from the Senate Mr. Roosevelt used his influence (because no one will contend that there is other influence weighty enough with the commission to get that kind of action) to put Mr. McAdoo into what probably is the most lucrative job in the whole Government service, outside the Presidency itself. He gets $10,000 more than a Senator and $5,000 more than the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

UNDOUBTEDLY, Mr. McAdoo is sincere in his eulogy of Mr. Roosevelt and in his desire to see him

WOOL SWANKY FOR THANKSGIVING COSTUMES

With frost and snow in the air, you'll do well to wear something in the wool line for your Thanksgiving costume. Wool is swanky as well as comfy for cold weather occasions. Ginger Rogers, top right, is wearing a blue wool dress with bunches of buttons masquerading as grapes for bodice fastenings, the buttonholes bound with ecru crepe to match the square collar. Jean Parker, top left, has chosen a riding hood sports costume with coat of cobalt blue wool and matching hood. Her coat has raglan sleeves that are square at the shoulders and tight at the wrists, and her gloves are in rust color. Below is Marianne Carlin wearing navy and white checked slacks with navy linen jacket. Over the jacket is slung a mahogany rose colored wool Spahi cape from Africa, the costume designed by Countess Gabrielle de Bosdari di Robilant, is both warm and stunning.

stay in the White House another four years. But, then, why wouldn't he be? Would it not be just as surprising if he were not eager for a third term as it would be if Mr. Ickes, Mr. Wallace, Mr. Murphy, Madame Perkins, Mr. Jackson, Mr. Corcoran, Mr. Cohen, Mr. Leon Henderson, Mr. Isador Lubin and others of the White House intimates, to say nothing of Senators Guffey, Pepper and Ellender—would it not be just as surprising if they were not hot for a third term? Wouldn't they all be crazy not to be? They may pose as patriots. Some really persuade themselves they are. But the fact remains that there isn't a disinterested man in the lot, not one whose own interests would not be served by the continuation of the Roosevelt regime, not one whose position will not be insecure if and when it ends.

THE truth is that neither the McAdoo statement nor the Gallup poll, nor the war, nor the neutrality fight, nor anything else has changed the basic facts about this third-term business. One fact is that while, of course, there is a strong sentiment for Mr. Roosevelt's re-nomination among his large personal following throughout the country and a very ardent desire for a third term among the hundreds of thousands of Federal employees, there are also a great many Democrats in Congress and out who supported him in 1936 who will not support him for a third nomination, and if nominated would not vote for him. In his own Cabinet there are at least three members who do not favor a third term. So strong is the party opposition that it is perfectly clear, first, that Mr. Roosevelt cannot possibly be "drafted" without conniving at the "drafting"; second, that if he should force a re-nomination a party split would ensue that almost certainly would mean defeat and humiliation.

NO one knows these things better than Mr. Roosevelt, unless it is Mr. Farley. They are the reasons for the conviction that Mr. Roosevelt has no intention of trying to break the oldest and most deeply cherished of American political traditions, and that at the time which suits him best he will make this plain. There is only one real

When we sell a USED CAR we like to make a FRIEND

* There are two ways to look at a used car sale. One is to "get rid of it" at the best price you can collect. The other is to make a friend and a customer. In the long run we figure it pays to have folks talk favorably about the deal they can always get from us on used cars.

That's why our shop takes special pains to put every car in good, sound running condition, and that's why we're satisfied even if we don't make much of a profit.

We've got some cars in the lot right now that we know are extra-good buys. We'd advise you to come in as soon as you can, because the best ones won't be here long.

Suggestions

By CORA ANTHONY
Director of A&P Kitchen

FRESH pork is the outstanding market value this week, whether you are looking for loin chops, a roast or spare ribs. Poultry remains low in price though preholiday prices are slightly higher. Beef costs about the same and lamb a trifle more than last week. Butter and egg prices are largely unchanged. Fish is relatively scarce.

Fruits are plentiful and with few exceptions they are inexpensive. Among the best values are apples, bananas, grapes, oranges, grapefruit and pears. Cauliflower is still unusually low in price but the peak of the season is past. Broccoli, Brussels sprouts, celery and spinach are reasonable.

Movie fans everywhere will have one decided advantage over the gay thousands who go to New England for the snow sports this year. INAUGURATE "BIG BROWN JUG" TILTS IN LOWER BUCKS

Bensalem Owls and Langhorne Redskins to Clash for 8-Cent Trophy

"LITTLE THREE" FRAY

Is Consolation Reward Among Three Schools; Newtown Included

Last week it was the "Little Brown Jug" at stake in the Bristol-Burlington game played here on Armistice Day. This week it is the "Big Brown Jug" as the Bensalem Owls and Langhorne Redskins clash in a "Little Three" Lower Bucks Conference fray at Langhorne this afternoon.

The "Big Brown Jug" is the trophy awarded the leading team among the three smaller schools of the Lower Bucks Conference—Bensalem, Newtown, and Langhorne. These schools purchased the jug at the nominal sum of eight cents and set it up as their goal among themselves since it was generally always Bristol or Morrisville copping the regular league trophy.

So far Bensalem has a good "hold" on the jug as a result of defeating Newtown on Pickering Field, Newtown, earlier in the season, 13-0. The second contest between the same clubs at Cornwells Heights, which ended 13-6 with the Owls on top again did not count in the "little three" conference but did in the main conference in order to give the Indians their full quota of games necessary for any title hopes in the Lower Bucks Conference.

Saturday afternoon the other pair of Lower Bucks schools will stack up against stiff opposition with the invaders, in both cases, being heavily favored to cop the day's honors.

At Morrisville, the Bulldogs will dedicate their new Robert Morris Athletic Field against Princeton High. There will be a field hockey game played before the services get under way with Morrisville's girls opposing the Fallsington High lassies.

Another interesting and lively game will take place here Saturday afternoon when Bristol High is pitted against the strong Bridgeport Dragons in a scrap which is fast rising as one of the leading games on the Cardinals' grid slate. In fact it has stepped into Doylestown's spot as the No. 1 game on the schedule.

Coach Tom Campion's boys will go into the tilt sporting a three-game winning streak and hope to add the Dragons as their fourth straight victim. On the other hand, the invaders have a record that is only marred by a pair of ties which is offset by six victories and are one of the leading teams in the Philadelphia Suburban Conference and they expect to keep their winning ways intact at Bristol's expense.

BASKETBALL LEAGUE APPROVES PLAYERS

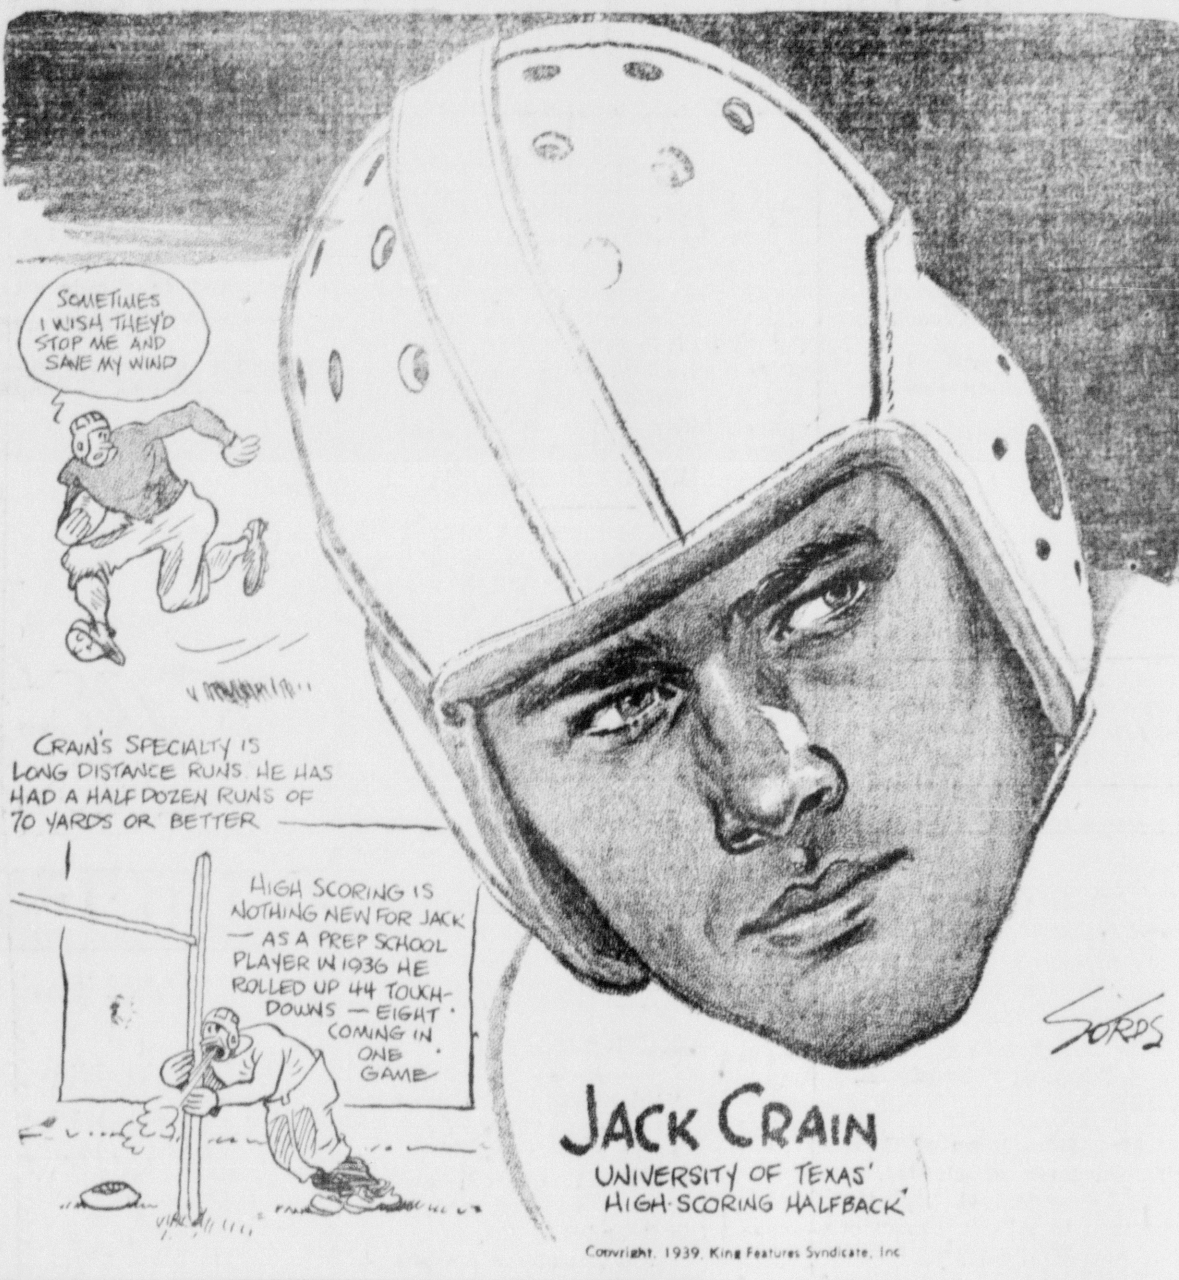

New changes in the rules were discussed last night at the meeting of the Bristol Basketball League held in St. Ann's Athletic Association clubhouse with President Thomas Juno presiding.

The league-appointed referee, Henry Morgan, was present and explained to the managers the manner in which the rules would be enforced. The following players were approved by the club:

Manhattan Soap Company—Charles Dugan, manager; James Dugan, director; Punkie Zefferies, Clyde Betts, Joe Gallagher, Brock Harkins, Nick Huffnell, Freddie Barbetta, Maurice Muligan, and Nick Vitale.

TEXAS TORNADO - - - By Jack Sords

Grundys—George Hermann, manager; William Cooper, director; Jesse Yanzant, Kyran Kervick, Joe Snyder, Dick Burke, Ralph Narcisi, Bill Gallagher, John Zack, Clarence Buckman.

Rohm and Haas Social Club—James Eagan, manager; Francis Lefferts, director; Ralph Cahall, John Cole, John Dougherty, Sam Smith, Aldridge Everett, Al Brown, Frank Fine, Joe Roe, Larry David, John Simkins.

Mill Street Boys' Club—Hystie Grimes, manager; Tom Profy, director; Charlie Hughes, Johnny Slavin, Ray Dorsey, Chuck Klein, Dick Lukens, and Tommy Profy.

Falls Township Alumni—Mike DeBisi, manager; John Custer, director; Freddy Breigle, Fred Cappiello, Bill Lovett, Shirley Duerr, George Roberts, John Schaffer, George Chewing, Bud Appenzeller, Bud Johnson and Steve Jadlocki.

The league will open its season Monday night on the Italian Mutual Aid floor with Mill Street Boys' Club playing Grundys and Manhattan meeting Rohm and Haas.

RICHBORO HIGH WINS SOCCER LEAGUE TILT

BUCKINGHAM, Nov. 17—A recalled goal cost the Southampton Greyhounds their first Lower Bucks soccer title as they were held to a 3-3 tie by the Buckingham Buccaneers in the league's curtain drawer here yesterday afternoon. Meantime, Richboro High, who was previously tied with the Greyhounds for first place before the day's activity began, beat New Hope handily, 3-0, and thereby captured the long-sought crown.

With the count knotted at 3-all, Norm Rochelle, the Greyhounds' left inner, planted his right toe to the leather sphere and it sailed on an incline toward the right side of the goal post, barely going through. But referee Gill ruled otherwise, claiming it went a little too far to the right and thus discounted the tally which would have won the battle for the boys coached by Claude Lodge as later events proved when, shortly afterwards, the tilt ended at the 3-3 count. The Greyhounds lost another goal in the first period when the Buccaneers' Ray Purdy, picked up the ball at the mouth of the goal, and in attempting to toss it out of danger, it rolled off his hand and through the posts. But again the referee recalled the "automatic" goal.

CELEBRATE ARMISTICE

Joseph A. Schumacher, Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars, held a special program, Friday evening at the headquarters in Croydon, in observance of the Armistice season. Members of the post and Auxiliary, together with their families, attended, with R. Goodman serving as master of ceremonies. War-time songs were sung by the gathering, and an oyster supper was followed by dancing. Tap dances were given by Jean Goodman and Doris Tyler. Commander Herman Pluma introduced the guests; and the Rev. Andrew George Solia, post chaplain, invoked the blessing, and gave an appropriate talk. To a Gold Star mother, Mrs. Bolton, Bristol, a gift was presented by Mrs. Betty Tyler on behalf of the Auxiliary of which she is president. The assemblage stood at attention as the "Star-Spangled Banner" was sung as a concluding number, Arthur Velt being the accompanist.

Lawrence Trial Moves Slowly To Main Witness

pected to complete his direct testimony.

Griffith's cross-examination at the hands of chief defense attorney Oliver K. Eaton is expected to consume several hours. It was apparent to courtroom attaches that the ex-engineer would be subjected to a severe grilling by the veteran Pittsburgh lawyer.

In order to expedite the trial's progress, Judge Howard W. Hughes revealed that court sessions would be held on Saturdays and on Thanksgiving Day.

Lawrence is charged with blackmail, extortion and violation of the election laws, charges which grew out of the 1938 Democratic primary campaign. The State contends he received $5,000 from Bowser which he failed to file as required by law with the State Department and the Democratic State Treasury.

The trial is expected to prove a sensation before it is completed. Prominent witnesses will include former Governor Earle, who may testify for both sides; Charles J. Margiotti, former attorney general whose campaign charges wrecked the Earle Administration and led to the present series of graft trials; and U. S. District Judge Harry A. Kalodner, who acted in 1935 as secretary to former Governor Earle.

Highlight of yesterday's session was the contradictory testimony given by the day's two witnesses, Griffith and Paul B. Reinhold, a Pittsburgh crushed stone salesman.

Griffith flatly contradicted the sworn testimony of Reinhold, who immediately preceded him on the witness stand, and of Arthur Colegrove, former secretary of property and supplies, an earlier witness.

Griffith also related how John Verona, dead Pittsburgh politician, boasted that the late Warren Van Dyke, Earle Administration secretary of highways, and other highway officials were "put there" to approve such proposals as that which ultimately led to the Erie gravel scandal.
